Our energy institute believes the greatest source of power is knowledge.

The Marcellus Shale reserve has brought much debate to our region. We are not here to pick sides but to create reliable, scientific information that leads to a more informed and productive discussion. Our unbiased, unaffiliated scientists and researchers are monitoring what is happening in our backyard and communicating it clearly to the community. This is why the U.S. Department of Energy awarded us a contract to establish the Institute for Energy and Environmental Research of Northeastern Pennsylvania. So when you see people testing the water of our rivers and streams, know they are part of our Army of Colonels, safeguarding our environment and helping our community decide the right energy source for our region.
